The Smart Manufacturer's
Guide to Waste Consolidation

Manufacturers are managing waste the hard way

Across the UK, waste management remains an unnecessarily complex challenge for many manufacturers. According to a 2024 survey conducted by Censuswide on behalf of Axil:

Why the disconnect?

For most, it's not about preference. Legacy setups, siloed contracts, and decentralised operations create a patchwork of providers that's hard to untangle.

But the consequences are clear:

- Fragmented communication between vendors
- Increased admin and invoicing workload
- Inconsistent service quality and compliance risks
- Missed opportunities for volume-based rebates

The case for consolidation

Moving to a single, tailored waste partner like Axil transforms how manufacturers manage waste. It isn't just a smart move, it's a strategic one. Here's why:

Streamlined operations

Simplify coordination by managing all waste types - general, hazardous, WEEE, recycling - through a single provider. That means fewer service disruptions, optimised schedules, and a more efficient on-site process.

Real cost savings

Bundling services enables better pricing, reduced duplication, and leaner processes. Fewer providers also mean fewer invoices, helping finance teams reduce workload and error rates.

Improved accountability

With one partner, responsibility is crystal clear. From service failures to reporting issues, there's no finger-pointing, just a single point of contact who takes ownership.

Tailored service and support

Your contract manager understands your business. That means proactive insights, customised service plans, and support aligned with your compliance, sustainability, and operational goals.

Simplified compliance

Consolidated data makes it easier to track performance, meet regulatory obligations, and prepare for audits. Our online portal brings together reporting, permits, and documentation in one place.

Real manufacturers. Real impact.

Even the most complex waste landscapes can be simplified. Here's how leading manufacturers are already benefiting from waste service consolidation.

A leading convenience food manufacturer moved from multiple waste suppliers to Axil, gaining:

- ✓ Fewer invoices, easing the admin burden
- ✓ Centralised compliance via Axil's online portal
- ✓ Fewer HSE audits due to improved visibility
- ✓ Higher rebates through consolidated waste volumes

FUGRO

Fugro reduced its number of suppliers dramatically:

- ✓ Easing operational complexity
- ✓ Boosting reporting visibility

Still managing multiple waste providers?

You're not alone.

But staying with a fragmented model could be holding you back. When you step back and assess the full picture, the opportunity for improvement becomes clear.

We can help you identify:

- ✓ Where you're overspending
- ✓ Where efficiencies can be gained
- ✓ How to reduce compliance risks and improve performance
